

A professor in the Neuroscience department at Corsen University has been accused of sexual harassment. 11 women, all of them former graduate students in the department, have come forward with stories about Prof. Jim Smith. The list of allegations against Smith includes frequently commenting on women's appearance, forcing students to have meetings with him in his private home, and hosting several hot-tub parties that included nudity, which students were present at. Witnesses also claim that it was well-known that Smith engaged in a series of quid pro quo sexual relationships with his female graduate students. An independent investigation by an external law firm was commissioned. If found guilty of sexual harassment, Smith may be suspended for an indefinite amount of time or even fired, a rarity for tenured professors. The report by the official investigation is based on testimony about his character by over 100 of his current and former students, and indicates that the facts are much less clear than the original allegations suggest.

A neuroscience professor, Jim Smith has been accused of the sexual harassment. 11 women who were his former graduate students came forward with stories. He would do things such as force students to have meetings with him in his home, host hot-tub parties, and comment on the girls' appearances. If the professor is found guilty of sexual harassment, he will either be suspended for a long period of time or fired.

A neuroscience professor, Jim Smith, is accused of sexual harassment. 11 women, his former graduate students, have come forward to accuse him. He is accused of having meetings in his home, commenting on female student's appearances, and having hot tub parties that involve nudity. If found guilty, he could be fired and go to jail for a long time.

11 women have accused their graduate professor of sexual harassment. There were a number of inappropriate events including nude hot tub parties. If found guilty the professor could lose his job.

Teacher was inappropriate with his grad students and may lose his job

A professor in the neuroscience department at Corsen University has recently been accused of sexual harassment. This professor, Jim Smith, has been accused by 11 female former graduate students. They have come forward with stories and accusations involving frequent comments on graduate students' appearance, and hosting hot-tub parties involving nudity at which students were present.

An external law firm has been commissioned to perform an external investigation. If the findings are serious, Smith could be indefinitely suspended, or even fired, which is uncommon for tenured professors.

A report has been commissioned on the professor's character with more than 100 sources documenting his behavior and character. This report shows that the allegations are less clear-cut than they may originally seem.

A professor in the neuroscience department at Corsen University has been accused of sexual harassment by 11 former graduate students. Accusations include inappropriate comments on graduate students' appearance, to hot-tub parties, to which the students were encouraged to attend. If convicted, the professor could potentially be fired, which is uncommon for tenured professors. In order to investigate the claims, the university put out a report detailing all of these claims. This report shows that these claims may not be as clear cut as they seem.

A professor in being suspected of the sexual harassment of about 11 students. He asked invited them to hot tub parties and commented on appearance. He could lose his job if he is convicted, which is uncommon for tenured professors. The allegations aren't that consistent though, so it is unclear what will happen next.

A professor was accused on inappropriate sexual conduct. He invited his students to his hot tub and made some comments on their appearance. He would definitely lose his job if convicted. However, the evidence is not conclusive.

There was a professor who was convicted because of inappropriate behavior. He invited some students to his hot tub and then made comments about their appearance. He is for sure going to be kicked out.