

On August 30 2018, 30,000 internet users in Spain received an email with the subject line 'Immediate response required - copyright infringement'. In these emails, the recipients were accused of illegally distributing pornographic content and were instructed to pay $11,500 by the end of September to avoid a lawsuit. Searching for the email address online leads to an official law firm website located in Barcelona. Shortly after the emails were sent out, the law firm disowned them, calling them a hoax. So far, police officials estimate that approximately 5% of the recipients have paid the money. This sums to more than $17 million that have been paid to the scammers. Now, nearly 4 weeks later, the police have tracked down the internet cafe from which the emails were sent. After observing the cafe's camera footage, the police arrested a man and a woman (both 52) who were allegedly responsible for the scam. If found guilty, they face up to 9 years in prison. Moreover, news outlets recently acquired access to the camera footage and found that the video material is of very high quality and therefore undoubtedly reliable.

Some Internet users in Spain were notified that they were infringing laws by distributing pornographic content, demanding payment. However, these notifications were all part of a scam and later revealed as such. When the police investigated this issue, they were able to track down two individuals who had been at an Internet cafe. Footage of the two is deemed to be reliable.

Two people sent an email scam to users in Spain asking for money. They were caught.

On August 30, 2018, 30,000 internet users in Spain received an email with the subject line "Copyright infringement—immediate response required." The email accused users of having illegally distributed pornographic content, and instructed them to pay $11,500 by the end of September to avoid a lawsuit. Searching for the email address online leads to the website of a real law firm in Barcelona. However, the law firm has come forward and identified these emails as a hoax. According to police, 5% of the email's recipients have already paid the fine, which amounts to over $17 million having gone to the scammers. Police were able to trace the original location from which the spam email was sent, and found that it came from an internet cafe. Footage places two people, one man and one woman, at the scene. If caught, the scammers face 9 years in prison. Furthermore, it has been reported that the footage from the cafe is extremely high quality, so it is quite likely to serve as unquestionable evidence against those charged.

Some Internet users in Spain got notified saying they were breaking the law by distributing pornographic content and demanded payment. This was a scam and police tracked down two individuals at an internet cafe. There is footage that is reliable.

A scam occurred in which 2 people sent an email from a real Barcelona law firm address, asking recipients to pay $11500 for wrongfully distributing pornographic content. 5% of recipients paid, amounting in $17 million for the scammers. Police traced the email to a Internet cafe, and 2 people were caught on high-quality camera committing the scam. If police are able to find and identify these people, there is ample evidence to charge them with the crime (and put them in jail for 9 years).

Some internet users in Spain got notified that they were breaking the law by distributing pornographic content and money was demanded from them. This was a scam and police tracked down two individuals at an internet cafe. There is footage that is reliable.

Two people sent a scam email from a valid Barcelona law firm's email address, demanding $115,000 for distribution of pornographic material. 5% of people paid, sending the scammers at total of 17 million dollars. The email was traced and the people were caught on high definition tape. If they are caught they face 9 years in jail.

In Spain, there were internet users who received notifications from some source that they were breaking the law by distributing pornographic material. The source demanded money but this turned out to be a scam. Police tracked the scammers to an internet cafe and have reliable footage as evidence.

Scammers sent fake emails to people where 5% of people responded, leading to the scammers earning millions of dollars

In Spain, internet users received notifications that they were breaking the law by distributing pornographic material. These notifications turned out to be a scam for money. Police have located the scammers at an internet cafe and have reliable footage as evidence.

Scammers sent emails to a group of people, and 5% of those people participated in the emails' instructions, thus leading to the scammers obtaining millions of dollars.