

A professor in the Neuroscience department at Corsen University has been accused of sexual harassment. 11 women, all of them former graduate students in the department, have come forward with stories about Prof. Jim Smith. The list of allegations against Smith includes frequently commenting on women's appearance, forcing students to have meetings with him in his private home, and hosting several hot-tub parties that included nudity, which students were present at. Witnesses also claim that it was well-known that Smith engaged in a series of quid pro quo sexual relationships with his female graduate students. An independent investigation by an external law firm was commissioned. If found guilty of sexual harassment, Smith may be suspended for an indefinite amount of time or even fired, a rarity for tenured professors. The report by the official investigation is based on testimony about his character by over 100 of his current and former students, and indicates that the facts are much less clear than the original allegations suggest.

A professor in the neuroscience department was accused of sexual misconduct. Apparently, the professor had received sexual favors in return for quid pro quo actions, and had participated in unprofessional acts. Investigations are underway by an external firm, and if the professor is found to be guilty of these actions, he may be suspended or even fired, which is rare for a tenured professor. However, the testimonies of about 100 students, which this investigation is based off of, may be less reliable than previously thought.

A professor has been accused of sexual misconduct. He has performed sexual favors. An external firm is conducting an investigation, and if found guilty, this professor could be suspended or even fired, which is rare for a tenured professor. However, the testimony of 100 students, of which this is based on, may not be as strong as previously thought.

A tenure professor is accused of sexual misconduct and is being investigated by an outside law firm. If found guilty, he will be arrested and discharged but testimony from 100 students might not be strong enough evidence.

A tenure professor is being accused of sexual misconduct and investigated by an outside law firm. If guilty, he will be discharged and let go, but it is unclear if 100 students' testimonies will be enough.

A professor with tenure was accused of sexual assault by over 100 of his students. It's unclear if that will be enough to convict him.

A professor in the neuroscience department at Corsen University named John Smith has been charged with sexual harassment by 11 of his former female graduate students. Apparently, he made inappropriate comments about the way women dressed and held nude hot-tub parties with his students. A third-party legal firm has been hired to investigate, and at this point over 100 people have testified regarding Prof. Smith's character. It is possible he will be placed on leave or even fired, which is unheard of for tenured professors.

A professor in the neuroscience department at Corsen University, John Smith, is facing sexual assault claims from 11 students. In the past, he has spoke inappropriately about women and held nude hot-tub parties with his students. A third party investigator has been hired and has interviewed 100 people about Smith's character. He may be forced to take leave or be fired, which is unheard of for a tenured professor.

John Smith, a tenured neuroscience professor, is facing sexual harassment allegations from 11 students. He is reported as having nude hot tub parties with students and saying inappropriate things to his female students. A third party is investigating and Smith is facing the potential of being fired or forced to resign.

John Smith, a neuroscience professor, is facing allegations of sexual misconduct from 11 students. Smith was accused of having nude hot tub parties with female students. Smith may be removed from his current position pending an investigation.

John Smith, a Neuroscience professor, is facing sexual misconduct charges from 11 students. Apparently, he would have nude hot tub parties with female students.

Prof Jim Smith had tons of sexual harassment allegations against him. Some of these allegations include hot tube and nudity related parties at his own house.

Professor Jim Smith faces several sexual harassment allegations, which include hot tube and nudity related events at his house.

A professor named Jim Smith is facing sexual misconduct claims, including hot tube and nudity at his house.

A professor named Jim Smith is facing sexual misconduct charges, including hot tube and nudity in his house.

A professor is facing sexual misconduct charges including hot tube and nudity in his house.